St. Augustine and St. Monica Roman Catholic Church, 2002

Historic Overview:

The former St. Catherine of Siena complex is primarily Romanesque in style but also exhibits Byzantine and Early Christian influences. The plan of the church is a Latin cross. The church was completed in 1929 and designed by the Detroit architecture firm of Donaldson and Meier. St. Catherine of Siena used the complex and later merged with St. Edwards Roman Catholic Church in the 1970's. The current parish St. Augustine and St. Monica was dedicated in 1990 after St. Catherine of Siena was closed due to lack of membership.¹
